A NOTE FROM THE DIRECTOR OF THE FLIES

It is impossible to describe the thrill I felt when I first saw The Flies performed by the cast you will see tonight. But, of course, that was long ago; the play you will see is the result of two and a half months of work by the actors, the crew and myself.

The cast is responsible for this show; they made the many decisions an actor or actress has to make. They make the final product what it is, as you see it. The crew outlines the show with lights, and provides the few props needed at the right time.

My job, though the efforts of both cast and crew, was embarrassingly easy. "All this play needs is a little steering," and the lights to show it under. To accomplish this was my job - plain and simple. Regina Vann helped me with this at least half of the enterprise. I had the pleasure of watching The Flies grow.

As for Mr. M, any type of thanks or credit would be redundant as well as superfluous. But he allowed me to direct the spectacle of The Flies, as I had pictured it when it kept me awake last summer. To this may I am eternally indebted.

"And the flute player, with (the remorse and grief) vanished forever - thus!"

Michael Woods

My efforts toward the production of The Flies are dedicated to my father, R.E. Woods, Sr.

A NOTE FROM THE DIRECTOR OF FRAGMENTS

The performance you will see is a reward for the many, devoted hours of a few devoted people. I want to thank my cast for the pleasures and the problems they provided. Timothy - I'll decide, Joseph - sorry about March 3, David - try to be serious, Julia - how do you put up with us? You all worked hard, but most important we enjoyed it.

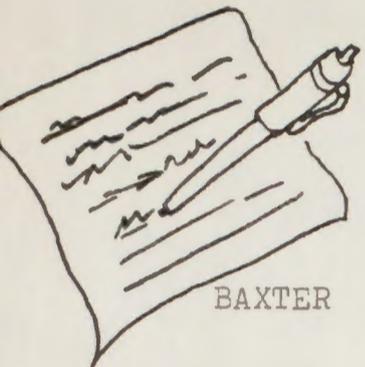

Mr. M. you've provided me with a new outlook on like, and human nature. Thank you, maybe one day I'll 'play it again.' I want to thank Dr. Miller, Dr. Schmidt, and Fr. Bichl for all their support through the years. And last special thanks to Ernst Wenninger who gave me my first insights to the theatre.

I have but one thank you left. The most important one of all. This one I give to mom and dad, you're always there when I need you. This one's for you.

"An actor's greatest reward is the self-satisfaction he feels when the applause rings through his body."

George D. Yezbak

There will be a 10 minute intermission between performances.
