MISSPENT YOUTH

Grace Day

Home

is a house whose heavy breathing lulls me to sleep salacious monsters live under my bed home
is a coffin home
is a place where I am the servant of sadness drowning in a desert storm begging for water from the mouths of angels home is between the sheets my morning breath smells like an aphasic goodbye
strangle me
to sleep in the north country under the harvest moon
I can't stop
rearranging our pieces
into a mosaic that is more cracked than whole
leave.
