June 2018

When the Dawn Becomes a City

Autumn Franz

John Carroll University, afranz20@jcu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://collected.jcu.edu/jcr

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://collected.jcu.edu/jcr/vol71/iss3/24

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by the Student at Carroll Collected. It has been accepted for inclusion in The John Carroll Review by an authorized editor of Carroll Collected. For more information, please contact connell@jcu.edu.
When the Dawn Becomes a City
By: Autumn Franz

And you can’t rest in the sight of beauty, and boys cradle the stars
to bend at the will of your panicked body, you find all the flaws in love.

I used to think love
was his bike and the beach, was his prayers, his religion.

But I would sculpt your body out of mountains,
take my nails to blooded bits, digging in the shallow.

Apollo would rest the scripture of his sculpted body at the foot of you,
cranes would fly in staggers,
and everyone would have walls full of art.

I want to write about love in all the ways it hasn’t broken me, his hands in my unconscious hands,
her coffee pot on the floor.