Whelan, Ryan Tie in Senior Class Election Columbus

Seniors Get Co-prexies In Recount

An unprecedented tie for the senior class presidency came out of elections held Tuesday and Wednesday for all classes. After a ballot recount the election committee announced that Candidates Ken Ryan and Jud Whelan each received 108 votes. The two men will serve as senior class co-presidents for the coming year, according to Election Committee Head John J. Navin.

A close vote was experienced in the other offices as Tim Ryan with 115 votes edged out Pat McCafferty with 97 for the vicepresidency. Receiving 128 votes, Pete Corrigan took the secretary's post from Bud Smith with 87, Joe DeGrandis garnered 123 votes to top Jim Sullivan's 94 for the treasurer's position.

Greater Glory of God

THE Reverend George J. Pickel, 60 years a Jesuit, twice president of the university, first a member of its staff 56 years ago, and for the past quarter of a century head of its Chemistry department, has answered his last roll call.

He was a gentleman whose innate courtesy and affability were but heightened with the passing of the years: A deep scholar and scientist who could quote Horace, Virgil and Shakespeare, and could discuss with equal facility the newest developments of physics and biology. A pioneer in the field of the chemistry of plastics. A director of a department which has always been a leading one in the university.

The man whose Diamond Jubilee celebration brought to the Carroll campus for the first time the Presidents of Baldwin-Wallace, Case and Western Reserve was equally at home discussing weighty problems with the children of Gesu school.

The secret of his personality lay in his deep and true holiness of life. He was a priest first and ever lived a life in keeping with his ideal. He was a member of the Society of Jesus whose motto "All for the Greater Honor and Glory of God" imbued his every action. The splendid faculties he possessed were used to the end for this one

Father Pickel made his Jubilee the occasion of a splendid tribute to both the dignity of the teaching profession and to the self-sacrifice of the lay faculty of the university. Simplicity is ever the work of a great man. The concluding words spoken on that occasion showed how well and calmly he had ordered his life.

"When one has lived for more than 80 years there are probably few years left. So when you read the announcement of my passing, please say a prayer for my soul." God rest you, Father Pickel.

Elections Committee

Hardened to collegiate politics by a series of balloting fiascos which were culminated in the protested sophomore elections of last year, the Carroll student body yesterday was surprised to see the end of an efficiently handled class election.

Much of the success stems from the new election system which was introduced last year by the Carroll Union in an attempt to do away with the criticized method of nominations from the floor. Following the petition and primary plan of most municipal voting, the new system eliminated the domination of class conventions by minority groups which were able to push their candidates through to the final ballot. Under the new set-up the possibility of stuffed ballot boxes has also been curbed. The final laurels, however, should be reserved for the competent handling of voting and petitions by the elections committee.

Headed by Union Vice-President John Navin and composed of Andrew Foy, William Corrigan, Paul Bohn, Gene Moynihan, Joseph Spaniol, Reginald Lyman, John Sullivan, Robert Ring, John Rice, Joseph Lo-Presti, Henry Trossen and Eli Vulku, the committee deserves the thanks of everyone interested in representative student gov-

UN Party Periled

BY the time the new United Nations' headquarters is completed in New York there may not be any organization

The action of the UN in the next few days regarding the Palestine partition may well decide the future of that organization. There is a greater threat to its survival than Russia's 26 vetoes.

The UN has taken upon itself the division of Palestine without providing for an effective method of enforcing its decision. Several of the member nations have refused to accept the partition plan as an infringement of its sovereignty. This refusal has resulted in a situation itself as dangerous as the fighting now going on in Palestine. The larger nations have sided with one or other of the antagonists out of fear for the loss of their property rights or prestige.

Peace is certainly not going to be re-stored as long as British planes are loaned to Arab forces and the United States talks of lifting the arms embargo. The solution lies not with the individual members of the UN but with the world as a unified body.

If it is necessary to recruit an army to force its decision-it should be done. One thing is sure, either the UN halt the fighting now or face the possibility-and responsibility of a new world war.

Best Wishes To Grads

IN this, the last issue of the semester, the Carroll News takes the opportunity of congratulating the largest graduating class in our school's history.

Within two weeks more than one hundred and twenty seniors, mostly veterans, will mount the platform to receive their scrolls. For four years, more or less, they have worried, fretted, toiled and struggled over textbooks and test tubes.

But we think that the students receiving their parchments and handshakes are getting much more than a mere indication of completed curricula and scholarship. For besides the formal part of his education the senior has gained immense practical experience from his daily contact with hundreds of men of his own age.

Perhaps it will be some time before the graduates come to a complete realization that college days are among the happiest and wisest spent. The daily bull sessions over coffee, the card games, the dances, the football games and the many other activities can never be forgotten.

Let it not be thought that the commencement exercises next month are a severing of school relationships. Many of our most ardent rooters at the football and basketball games graduated from Carroll twenty years ago.

Registration Changes

SINCE the post-war surge of the veteran to the nation's already bulging colleges and universities, the words "Registration Day" have brought groans of anguish from student and school official alike. Not infrequently, students have permitted themselves to believe that the endless lines, the sweating and the haggling so often a part of registration, are all part of a diabolical scheme to create student discomfort.

Evidence that the tangle of registration is as distasteful to school authorities as it tempts, on a restricted departmental basis, of the matches is to students is offered by the recent atto gather pertinent information before the actual registration occurs. The departments of philosophy and mathematics, in conducting a pre-summer survey, are attempting to get the information necessary to eliminate such incidents, as for example, the clamoring of one hundred students for a single class.

These departmental surveys have noted the number of students planning to attend the summer session. Tentative arrangements have been suggested involving the balancing of classes quantitatively. Certainly the effort is a commendable one, as is the pre-registration policy of the B.E.G. school. The authorities responsible are to be congratulated. Any reasonable means of lessening the complexities of registration are happily welcomed by all con-

UMT vs. Educators

A JOINT statement signed by 83 leading American college presidents and released last week renewed the attack from this quarter against the selective service and universal military training bill now before congress.

We are only glad the educators did not oppose the issue on the now, we believe, thoroughly discredited notion that U.M.T. and conscription constitute an unusual moral danger to the youth of this country.

We believe, as the majority of the Carroll student body believes, that U.M.T. and conscription, as attainable through the proposed legislation, are desirable and necessary at this time. We do not feel, however, that a carefully administered program of military preparedness by means of a draft must necessarily imply a threat to civil and cultural liberties as feared by the educators. Certainly it need not mean the death of those universities dependent for their existence upon full enrollment.

By reason of the unsettled state of world affairs and the possibility of another world conflict growing from them, it would seem necessary to support military preparedness through U.M.T. not necessarily for our own national strength but as a means of averting another war. Such a stand should be taken despite any threatened set-back to our institutions of higher learning.

Monkeys Lose Their Brute Animal Minds

By LEE CIRILLO

Dr. Dropus Line, renowned psychologist and guidon bearer for Gnu troop No. 12, has announced the completion of a series of carefully conducted tests which prove conclusively that various forms of animal life have intellects and that in some cases, the animals were mentally far superior to humans.

Among the animals tested in his scientific laboratory in New Lostland were a dancing worm from Afghanistan, a chess-playing bear from Cucamonga, a pet chimpanzee of Mrs. Art T. Tistic, and a speckled robin from Can-

Worm Turns

The first test conducted was on the dancing worm. After blindfolding both extremities of the worm, Dr. Line delivered a sharp rap to each end. The purpose behind this was to discover if either end would accuse the other of assault and battery. Immediately after striking the blow, the doctor snatched the blindfold from the worm's eye, expecting to see one end stagger the other with a vicious blow. Much to his surprise, however, the two ends tied themselves into a stevedore's knot and sang the following ditty, in low, harmonious tones:

I love the Big Apple, I love the Susie Q; Humans are tricky, But worms are too.

After recording the results of this test, Dr. Line returned the faithful worm to Afghanistan with an album of the latest jazz

"Humans of high intellectual prowess were pitted against the chess-playing bear in a battle of wits during a recent test," reports Dr. Line. Six of the world's greatest chess players were assembled, and the bear was placed behind six chess boards to play against them all at the same

Unfortunately Dr. Line was displeased with the results of this experiment and nothing was stated to the press. Rumors from an unimpeachable source say that the reason behind the secrecy was that the bear won only three

Math Wizard

The most successful test cited by Dr. Line was one which involved a pet chimpanzee of Mrs. Art T. Tistic. The chimp had the amazing ability to compute mathematical problems faster than a math professor. Within the marvelously short period of three minutes and two seconds, the chimpanzee computed the energy released when the back leg of a grasshopper strikes the earth. Physicists have checked the computations to the nth dedegree and have found the chimpanzee to be perfectly correct.

The speckled robin showed clearly the insight and instinct natural to birds when it was taken to Tibet and freed. Two months and three days later the robin was reported over New York, and after a short crosscountry flight it showed up for its debut at the Los Angeles opera house.

The behavior of animals and their capabilities was closely observed in a later study of snow shoe rabbits. It was found that the animals were remarkably apt in multiplication and equally as poor in addition and division.

Revises Text

All the possibilities for observing the capabilities of animals and the elements which control their behavior have never been explored. Many theories have been advanced through the years, but until more scientific studies are attempted, no definite proofs such as that of Dr. Line, noted dog fancier and scientist, will be brought to light. Too many obvious truths are hidden in dusty scientific manuals. The scientists are at fault; the public is at fault too. Its everyone's duty to get out and meet some nice ape, or worm, or somethin'.

On the east coast the Rev. Raymond Anable, S.J., author of Philosophical Psychology, is revising his text to conform with these new trends in the world of psychology. Taking cognizance of Dr. Line's deductions and those of Life magazine, he has added fourteen new syllogisms to his test; these establish his position on the Life-Line standthat of catagorically ignoring the whole thing.

Nuptial Notes

The perennial pain connected with the final exams will be hardly noticed by the group of marriage-minded students who are planning to exchange vows in the near future.

To break up the test-week melancholy Dorm student Ken O'Neill will middle-aisle tomorrow with Collette Fraier. Collette's twin sister Charlotte has already set her marriage date to dormite John Hartmann for September 4.

On June 9, Frank Yadouga, president of the French club, will be married to Mary Lou Koehler. The ceremony is to take place in Holy Name Church.

Invitations have been sent out to friends of Vince Franciolli and Evelyn Toni for their wedding June 12 at Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Church.

Another engagement announced recently is Sophomore Bob Hawley to Janet Drees. They plan to wed August 21.

Assistant Superintendent of Grounds Jerry Higgins presented a sparkler to Margaret Collins this week. August 28 is the date for their merger at St. Philomena's Church, Lovely Miss Collins is a switchboard operator at this fair school. Carroll Union president John Kilbane and Margaret Dwyer are planning their wedding for August.

The family of Jeanne Louise Gensert has announced her engagement to senior Neil Conway, vho enters Western Reserve Law School this fall.

Victor Rozance will foresake politicking for Theresa Rochford sometime this fall. Plans are also in the offing for the wedding of John Wamelink, III, to Barbara Erwin RADUATION day was drawing nigh. Prokop Schultz, a GRADUATION day was drawing ing... senior, brushed a comic book aside and gazed confidently through an open dorm window. "I'm looking into the future, he thought to himself. "Another two days and I'm tomorrow's fireball pitcher of renown, business man of distinction, atomic scientist, popular candidate for governor, military genius, engineer of the year, and hundred thousand-a-year surgeon. And I'm still so young . . . eight months until my 30th birth-

Prokop lingered over his tall glass of Bosco another moment, then wound up and let fly with his high hard one. "Hit that, if you can," he smirked. "Ha, couldn't smell it, eh?"

"Miss Weirl, bring me the Landsdorf, Engelhead, Birdbath files and a checkbook. We're in arrears about 400,000. Should have sent it out yesterday but that million dollar order held me up.'

Enter Joe Cobbish, the Companion

The door opened and Joe Cobbish, Prokop's buddy, walked in. "Where you sitting for baccalaureate?" Joe asked.

"Right next to you," Prokop said smiling; "right next to you, Joe, Joe looked puzzled. "Wonder what I'd do if they handed me the degree in my right hand. Shake with my left?" Prokop's forehead wrinkled. "Never thought of that. Suppose you wouldn't shake at all then. Just kind of dip your head and say 'thanks.'" Joe frowned again. "Yeh, and have your hat flop off? You're a

"Well, I don't know," said Prokop, "ask Father Castellano." Joe brightened. "Good doggone idea!"

When Prokop looked up, Joe was gone. Hmmmm, just a drop more of that yellow liquid, Dr. Faustus, and I think we have it. Whoops, a little too much. Here, let me strap a tourniquet around your waist and you'll be all right. Gad, that's a powerful mixture. Strong enough to set off a chain reaction-if we had a chain." Dr. Faustus was in a swoon. The awful stuff had got him. Dr. Schultz approached the vial from behind a tremendous strip of tempered duralium. He worked quickly, his skilled hands moving like pistons. "There," he said finally, "I knew that Erin Brew bottle cap would come in handy sometime."

A Thesis Problem No Less

Joe Cobbish was just entering the room-through a window. Joe often came in through a window. "Too much noise knocking on a door,"

The reality was too much for Prokop Schultz. He snapped back. "What'd he say?" he asked.

"He said not to worry about it," replied Joe. "Not to worry until commencement anyway. Say, Pro, you know what a thesis is? My major prof said I should have had one in last week. What's he talking about?"

Prokop grinned. "Why, you dope, it's a library book. You should have handed in a library book. Wait a minute, I got one left over from English I. You can have it, but hand it in right away or you'll never get out. I been hearing some bad things about guys without theses. You might be in dutch now already."

Joe reached for the library book and then was gone. "Listen, Jake, if I get in office, I'll break up every last one of these state political machines," affirmed gubernatorial candidate Prokop Schultz. "They won't get away with one red penny with me running the show. I know I can get the sawed-off shotgun vote and probably a good share of the meatpackers', but we've got to get out and hustle support from the egg candlers. I'm telling you, Jake, if I can get the votes, I'm as good as in. What do you think?"

Colonel Schultz and C Rations

A jet roared over the CP and Colonel Schultz looked up, anger stalking his handsome features. "Blasted jet!" he said calmly but resolutely to the aid. "Fetch me an overlay, Lt. Belknep." The lieutenant shook noticeably as he spread the rough-draft map. "Right here," pointed the redoubtable Colonel Schultz, "is the enemy rocket mortar. Over here is the C ration dump. Our approach will be from the left. We'll go around the mortar position this way and deploy to the right of the C rations. Sgt. York will take out the guard. The rest of the battalion will plant the explosives and then scatter. If we don't get those C rations this time, it's hash for everybody for a month."

Joe was just coming in through the window. He looked worried. "Heh, Pro, a librarian's got your book. I couldn't help it. Bumped into her on the third floor and she wanted to know all about what I had in my hand. Well, what was I going to do? The thing was three and a half off and ran.

"That's okeh," said Prokop sympathetically; "I'll get another one. What about your thesis?"

"Ah, it can't be much if the prof just reminded me today. Forget it. Why're they going to receive us into the alumni association? I mean any special reason?

Sure, we'll be alumni." "No kidding? Gee, who ever thought we'd be alumni? Graduates, yeh, but alumni, wow! What is a alumni? Ever see one?" "Once, I think. At a football game. There's a lot of names of some in the lobby. Go on and take a look." Joe Cobbish vanished.

Schultz, the Sandhog, Saves Day

"But the entire tunnel will cave in on us if that brace gives way," shouted the foreman, striving to be heard over the clamoring voices and ominous rumbles. A minor landslide was already claiming the attention of about 50 of the desperate sandhogs when a gaunt figure, singularly majestic in shining black hip boots and pressure helmet, engaged the attention of the industrial overseers and said, "Captain Schultz reporting." The group reaction was immediate. Every eye registered hope. "Captain Schultz, we place ourselves in your hands," they said. "If anyone can pull us out of this, you can." Without hesitation the tightlipped Schultz extracted a rectangular object from a small leather pouch, boldly approached the weakening brace and inserted the saving instrument in a matchless demonstration of coolness under fire. The rumblings ceased. The overseers cried unashamedly. "What was it?" asked a small, stinking laborer, "An old ethics book," spoke Captain

Prokop Schultz was standing in front of the president of the university. In cap and gown he looked resplendent and more than a little scholarly. "And to you, Prokop Schultz," the president was saying, "John Carroll University awards this . . ."
