Seasonal Grief

By: Brandi Sutton

As the nights grow colder
Sick throats taste bittersweet
Impending signs we're getting older
What clouds the air is seasonal grief

Not a reason to know gut wrench
But to be honest, I feel overspent
Addicted to the exhaust in the breeze
I should probably just go to bed

But eight hours won't bring back that warmth
You thought you felt in the summer

Is there a void in love
If you won't accept theirs
Is it wrong to step on yourself
And over a gift so rare
