Pat Dunn

Leaves shimmering, wind screaming,
I twist and place my feet on a thick, dark, trunk
I grip the bark between my toes, perfect grooves
Fighting gravity to walk the brown path.

Leaning my head backwards
Looking over a forest of masts resting on warm sand,
Sails flapping and cables jingling
Gazing onto the restful blue green where the wind rips,
But in the cove of trees
I reside at peace,
Just past the copper beach
