The Head

Cecilia Margaret

At the edge of the lawn he watches on,
That massive, historic face.
What have those stone eyes seen
Here on this quad of green?

If only those lips could move,
Would he grin or disapprove?
Far away his expression is graven
As he looks upon this peaceful haven.

Closer though he seems to soften,
As if in life he smiled often,
Beaten down by time and weather.
Still, he holds his composure together.

If only those eyes could close.
If only those lips could move.
Is it then left to me,
To be his mouth, his hands, and feet?
