Aging

Emily Fagan-Zirm

I want a pony. I want a puppy. I want to go to Disney and wear a pink, sparkly dress to dance with Sleeping Beauty. I want an Icee at the mall and I want to get my ears pierced. I want to be just like mommy when I grow up. I want to walk to the bus stop on my own. I want to sleep over at my friends on a school night. I want to buy the newest clothes. I want to have expensive makeup like the “cool girls.” I want to be liked in high school. I want a boyfriend who plays football. I want to have my own car. I want to drive myself to school. I want to pass this exam. I want summer to be never ending. I want to get into college. I want to turn 21. I want to pass this class. I want to go out with my friends every day of the week. I want life to be like this forever. I want to have a night in. I want to go to bed early. I want a real job. I want to pay my bills on time this month. I want to leave my cubicle. I want to make a difference. I want...
