Well, I Have Nothing Else to Do

Elizabeth Franco

You know, I do genuinely enjoy having some consistent company, but if it weren't for COVID we wouldn't be literally trapped in here together. Sure, we chose to be in here together rather than anyone else, in this bubble of 10, but trapped is still trapped. I try doing tasks, to distract myself from the mistrust, the mistrusting every step the others take. Where have they been? Are they lying about it? Why do I distrust my own family and friends? I try and shake it off, focus. Lord it's hard to focus. I've been trying to keep myself busy. Perform my usual tasks, pretending to perform my tasks. Pace in endless circles through the halls while I struggle to hold onto a routine. I swear to you God if you just let me get out of this alive and sane I'll be happy. Have I died? Oops, guess I'll go get a snack and wait until everyone else is done so we can hang out again. I should never have trusted reckless roommates.

Among Us I know
There is nothing but distrust
Every friend is sus
