Salmi presented with SU proposal
SU proposes change in how funds are allocated to student activities

Christine Hennessy

A proposal to change the system by which student organizations receive money has been presented by the Student Union and given to Richard F. Salmi, S.J., president of Boston College.

"The proposal has nothing to do with the money that has been allocated," said Jon Cranley, president of the Student Union.

"The Student Union wants to give student organizations a voice in the spending process," he said.

"We are the last school to have this go through," said Cranley.

"There seems no reason why the current system shouldn't be changed," said Salmi.

"The reaction was really good. There were a lot of people who left the service to be involved in the proposal," said Cranley.

"The appropriation must include all university money appropriated to student organizations in order to introduce the proposal," said Cranley.

"There were a lot of people who left the service to be involved in the proposal," said Cranley.

"The grant was given as part of a $54 million, once the Director of Student Activities position was created."
It's for all freshmen and sophomores to attend, but it's not. All students can attend.

The Career Information Night is a chance for students to begin thinking about their career paths. The event is sponsored by the Career Services Office and the Student Union. Students are encouraged to attend to better reach the financial need of the Student Union.

George Sweeney, '55, Assistant Director, said, "The Career Information Night is a chance to gather information, ask questions and make decisions."

"Some of the employers will be looking for students for internships and co-op opportunities," said Dr. Rachel Samborski, Residence Hall Director and Dean of Students. "Students who really helped their coaches or who did their best could gain an opportunity."

The Career Information Night is on September 27, starting at 7 p.m. in the Student Center Conference Room.

ject to me is there a meeting on what is known to students as the "Official Business" agenda?" Walton said. "I think the idea is that this should be open, that the public should be able to attend."

The proposal would create a committee that would be charged with "developing and implementing a process for reviewing and providing input into recommendations made by the Student Assembly," according to the proposal text. The committee would be made up of 10 members, including five from the Student Senate, two from the Student Assembly, and three from the University Senate.

The proposal would also require the Student Senate to give final approval to any recommendations made by the committee. However, the Student Senate would not be able to make changes to the recommendations made by the committee, according to the proposal.

In addition, the proposal would require the Student Senate to hold at least two meetings per semester to review recommendations made by the committee. The meetings would be open to the public and would be advertised in the College News.

The proposal would also require the Student Senate to provide feedback to the committee on a regular basis. This feedback would be used to help the committee improve its processes and recommendations.

According to Walton, the goal of the proposal is to make the legislative process more transparent and to provide a more open dialogue between the Student Senate and the public.

"The proposal has nothing to do with money but rather the system of how the money will be allocated," John Cranley said. "So we have to talk about that."

"We have to find a way to make the system work better," Cranley continued. "The money has to be managed better."

"We need to have a system that is more transparent," Cranley said. "The students need to be involved in the decision-making process."

Cranley said that the proposal would create a new system for allocating the money that would be more transparent and would involve the students in the decision-making process.

Cranley said that the proposal would also create a new system for allocating the money that would be more transparent and would involve the students in the decision-making process.

This book is a remarkable project that will make a lasting impact in the world of science and education. It is a unique opportunity to learn from the perspective of a chimpanzee, and to explore the intricacies of their communication and behavior.

The book is divided into several sections, each focusing on a specific aspect of chimpanzee communication. It begins with an introduction to chimpanzee language and communication, followed by a detailed exploration of the various types of communication used by chimpanzees, including vocal, body, and facial expressions.

One of the most fascinating aspects of this book is the inclusion of actual chimpanzee conversations, recorded by experts in the field. These conversations provide a unique glimpse into the minds of these remarkable animals, and highlight the complexity of their communication.

The book also includes a discussion of the unique challenges faced by chimpanzees in the wild, and the efforts being made to ensure their survival.

Beyond the blues: college students face depression

Academic and social pressures leave students with personal dangers

The research has shown that many students struggle with depression, anxiety, and other mental health issues. These struggles can have a significant impact on their academic performance and overall well-being.

However, it can be challenging to identify these issues and seek help. This book aims to provide a resource for students who may be struggling with their mental health, as well as for those who want to support their peers.

The book includes tips and strategies for managing stress and anxiety, as well as information on seeking help from counseling services on campus.

It is hoped that this book will serve as a valuable resource for students who are struggling with their mental health, and will help them feel less alone in their struggles.

Robert Schubeck shares thoughts on death penalty reflection on San Quentin Prison, Dead Man Walking and morality

Sherry Lunachetti, 21, a senior at Carroll, has been working for one of the last two years of the Carroll Student Television Network’s (CSTV) studio. Schubeck, 21, said many students only want to make their mark before graduation. However, Schubeck is an exception and is a testament to the students who take their work seriously.

Schubeck, who had not yet seen the movie Dead Man Walking, commented that, “I think this is one of the best character wraths on the death penalty and for people to see. The thing that made that possible was that she was on air. I didn’t know it.”

Svoboda said that the movie will make people think about their future, and the students who work on the network can do this each week.

Birds fly in and out of the barred wire door at the San Quentin Prisoner to help with the daily task of feeding the prisoners.
Sherry Luxentetti, a sophomore at John Carroll U.S.C., sits on the second floor of the new building, working on a story about the dead man mentality and morality.

"I believe the death penalty is cruel and demeaning, simply because people are sentenced to death to be put on death row for a certain time," said Luxentetti.

"San Quentin is a prison, and they have more freedom to make decisions, as long as it is not harming anyone else.
But they should not be able to kill another ing, whether it is a criminal or not. But they are not able to kill another person.

"The death penalty is a way to put up a barrier between two people," added Luxentetti. "It is a way to separate two people, but it is not a way to solve the question of the death penalty. It is a way to put down the person who committed the crime, but it is not a way to solve the question of the death penalty."

A 6'7" inches and 225 pounds Jeff Dugan is probably considered big by most people. He probably is a good thing because he brings you a confident basketball player. Jeff Dugan will highly contribute to the OAC this year. "It's a great opportunity for Jeff to go out and play," said Coach Mike Moran.

Dugan said that the game was a major improvement over the first game. "We're working on the defense," Dugan said. "We're getting better every day, and we're working hard to play as a team.

"We're working on the defense," Dugan said. "We're getting better every day, and we're working hard to play as a team.

The Cleveland team was led by senior center Jeff Breinholt, who finished with 20 points and 13 rebounds. "My goal is to get a double-double every game," Breinholt said. "I'm working hard to make it happen.

The Blue Streaks won 74-38 against the OAC. The record improved to 1-0 in the OAC and 2-1 overall. "It's good to get the win," said Coach Mike Moran. "We were able to play as a team and get the job done.

This game ended John Carroll's losing streak to 3 games against the two OAC opponents. The Blue Streaks led 11-0 after the first five minutes of play. "It was a tough game," said Coach Mike Moran. "But we were able to come back and win.

The Blue Streaks scored 12 points in the second half and took the lead 56-47 with 2 minutes remaining. "We were able to get the lead back," said Coach Mike Moran. "We played a great game.

The Blue Streaks improved their record to 2-1 overall and are currently in fourth place in the OAC. "We're still working on our game," said Coach Mike Moran. "But we're getting better every day.

Opus: That's just a cartoon character, right?

"Do-a-deer, a deer, do..." is a golden rule I've been following. Classic ties that almost everyone knows and loves really well. I've tried to make a video or song of it. I'm considering taking a class in the arts or music in general in today's society. I often think about the role of art and music, along with every other subject taught in school. The arts are certainly an integral part of our lives. I'm not sure if they are taught effectively in our educational system. I might argue that we knew in advance that the arts and music would enrich our lives. The arts and music have been an integral part of our society for centuries.

Another recent album with a similar goal is Mr. Holland's Opus. This movie, perhaps not destined to be as timeless as a classic like A New Hope or Hamlet, musical, examines the effect music has on our society, or, more precisely but accurately, the negative effect that society has had on the study and appreciation of music. Before the original album was released, (who stars in the film as Mr. Holland) delivers a brief monologue to the audience regarding the value of music and the arts in general in today's society. Unlike the Sound of Music, which took an optimistic perspective on music, Mr. Holland's Opus takes a more somber look at the present condition of the arts in our society, especially in our educational system.

During the movie, I've noticed some very valid points, relevant both throughout the country and right here in C.U. Around the country, music and the arts have taken a major back seat to science, math, etc. Science is used to study the world around us, math helps us work out our problems, and English helps us communicate with each other. The arts are being neglected.

Suffering from withdrawal

The plan to open the Automatic Teller Machine, or ATM, the convenience of commerce behind the ATM was missed. Normally, I would probably need to do homework and read books. This is one of the reasons I took my vacation in one year.

I know what you're thinking, "Why does black history matter?" They are important for the future of our nation. No one is even attempting to deny that. But, in order to retain and fulfill the mission of education, the arts cannot be neglected.

These are just a few of the great debates in Congress between the Democrats and Republicans. The Democrats claim that the Republicans are attempting to cut all funding for the arts, and the Republicans claim that the Democrats are in favor of too much funding. Locally speaking, JCU is a perfect example of declining arts programs in the school. Some might argue that we knew in advance that JCU is not a school with a strong music or art program and that if that was the case, we could have gone to another school. But, because we did not offer any music or art elective courses (outside of one credit hour for participation in the athletic program and the art and the art history courses that are offered), it is hard to argue our argument that the school is serious about the arts. The only courses they have are odd and not really a serious effort to offer any music or art elective courses (outside of one credit hour for participation in the athletic program and the art and the art history courses that are offered).

However, I do not think that there have been a great deal of dropouts because all students at JCU do not even know that there is a "music" or a "art" or a "drama" or a "dance" or a "theater" course. The arts are offered as part of the liberal arts curriculum. It is hard to argue that they have been a great deal of dropouts because all students at JCU do not even know that there is a "music" or a "art" or a "drama" or a "dance" or a "theater" course.
The globe is still warming

Jessica Matthews
The Carroll News

The gloating about global warming that should be making people fearful is making me sick. It's so easy to be lulled into a false sense of security by our modern, high-tech society of information and gadgets. People can go on for years without thinking about what they are doing to the environment, until they read about the "greenhouse gas problem" and realize how much they need to do something about how they live right now. Then they get scared for a moment before they fall back into their comfortable routines. And then another winter comes, and they get comfortable again. It's like a cycle that can be hard to break.

I'm not saying that people shouldn't be concerned about global warming. Of course they should. But I do think we're seeing a lot of talk and not enough action. And it's not just about the United States. This is a global problem that affects us all, and we need to take responsibility for what we're doing to the planet.
