The[1436] faculty handbook, issued by the university, outlines the guidelines on tenure. Each department is encouraged to improve on this process. The tenure process is explained in detail in the faculty handbook. The tenure process begins the year a professor is tenured. The process involves the department department, the dean, and the faculty member coming together to discuss the professor's performance. The process is an important way for the university to ensure that its faculty members are performing at the highest level.

The tenure process at John Carroll University is a complex and lengthy one. The process begins with a professor being evaluated by their department. This evaluation is then reviewed by the dean and the faculty member comes together to discuss the professor's performance. The process is an important way for the university to ensure that its faculty members are performing at the highest level.

Carroll responsibility
For Carroll students, the tenure process is important because it helps ensure that they are learning from the best professors. The tenure process is an important way for the university to ensure that its faculty members are performing at the highest level.

The Residence Hall Association hosted Little Sibs Weekend, which had been more than three years in the making. The event kicked off Friday night for the Wolf-n-Pot and included a magic show, a dance, a raffle, and the election of council officers.

For a complete schedule of events, see the Campus Life section.

The Little Sibs Weekend had been previously scheduled due to the McClurg Library renovations, which had shifted the event from February to November.

The problem may have been that there were too many activities planned. Wahl said, "The dance was never well organized or planned. The Wolf-n-Pot was good, but the magic show was terrible." Wahl said that the majority of students who attended the weekend were students who had never been to Little Sibs Weekend before, which may have contributed to the low turnout.

With Little Sibs, "Activities included arts and crafts, parties, a scavenger hunt," said Wahl. "The residence halls were decorated with streamers and balloons, and residents were encouraged to participate.

A smack in the face

The show was full of "surprising performances," said Wahl, "and the audience was happy with the performance. The only problem was that the students who attended the show were sad." Wahl added, "The magic show was good, but the dance was terrible." A group of 30 students and members of the John Carroll community recently gathered in the Student Union for a Talent Show "in bold" as the first line of text.

"The event was a huge success," said Marcella Perry, president of the JCU Student Senate and senior in marketing.

The show, which featured various acts including singing, dancing, and poetry, raised funds for a scholarship for incoming African American freshman students.

Join us at our next event this Saturday, May 15, at 7:00 p.m.

Cuba reacts to attacks on U.S. civilian planes without remorse

By Joe Skillman

The United States recalled its ambassador Monday after Cuba's scenic island Friday — where the two Cuban fighter jets were downed last week — and Washington responded by closing its embassy in Havana for three days.

Cuba's foreign ministry said that the two countries have agreed on a joint statement expressing their desire to cooperate on counterterrorism.

The statement was released Monday by Washington and Havana, which were meeting for the first time since the downing of the planes.

As of Monday, Cuba had not made any formal announcement about the downing of the planes, which were shot down by Cuban military aircraft.

Cuba and the United States have not had diplomatic relations since 1961, when the two countries broke off diplomatic ties.

The United States closed its embassy in Havana in 1978, and Cuba has not opened a diplomatic mission in the United States since 1959.

The downing of the planes last week sparked international outrage and led to a diplomatic row between the two countries.

Cuba has denied any involvement in the downing of the planes, saying that the United States had bugged the island and that the downing of the planes was a response to the bugging.

The United States has not denied bugging Cuba, but has said that it is doing so to protect itself.

The downing of the planes has raised tensions between the two countries, and there have been reports of increased military exercises near the U.S. border.

Cuba and the United States have been at odds for decades, with the United States accusing Cuba of supporting terrorism, and Cuba accusing the United States of supporting counterrevolutionary groups.

The United States has blacklisted Cuba as a state sponsor of terrorism, and has imposed economic sanctions on the island.

Cuba has also been blacklisted by the United States as a state sponsor of terrorism, and has been placed on the U.S. list of countries that support terrorism.

The United States has also imposed travel restrictions on Cubans, and has prohibited the sale of arms and military equipment to Cuba.

Cuba has responded by closing its embassy in Washington and by imposing its own travel restrictions on Americans.

Walsh: U.S. not firing on Cuba

The United States called an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council on Monday in a wake of two Cuban fighter plane attacks on American airliners over the weekend. Earlier, two U.S. airliners had been shot down by Cuban fighters in international airspace.

The official statement said that the downing of the Cuban fighters was "a clear violation of international law and a serious threat to the safety of United States citizens." The statement went on to say that the United States would reserve the right to respond in any way it deems necessary.

Meanwhile, in Havana, Cuba's Foreign Ministry denied that its planes had fired on the U.S. airliners. The ministry said that the incidents were caused by "circumstances beyond our control." It added that Cuba was ready to cooperate with the United States to investigate the cause of the incidents.

IRA bombs bus in London in protest

IRA bombs in London in protest against the visit of U.S. President Clinton. The explosion occurred on a bus near the Heathrow Airport, killing two people and injuring several others. The IRA, which has been active in the region for many years, said that the blast was a protest against the visit of the U.S. president.

President Clinton was in London to attend the G7 summit, where he was expected to discuss a range of issues, including the situation in Northern Ireland.

Black History Month:

Essay Contest Winner

The winner of the 2016 Black History Month Essay Contest is Black History Month: "Black History Month: A Celebration of Black Excellence" by John Shaw, Jr. Mr. Shaw's essay explores the significance of Black History Month and highlights the contributions of African Americans throughout history.

The essay contest was sponsored by the National Council of Black Alumni and Friends of Howard University, in partnership with Howard University's Office of Student Affairs and the Howard University Alumni Association. The contest sought to encourage students and educators to explore the rich heritage of Black history and to celebrate the achievements of African Americans.

The winner will receive a $500 cash prize and his essay will be featured on the Howard University website and in the Howard University Magazine.

The essay contest is one of several events being held at Howard University to commemorate Black History Month. Other events include a lecture series, a film series, and a series of workshops and seminars.

The role of Gerry Adams, Sinn Fein leader in the Northern Ireland peace process.

Gerry Adams, the leader of Sinn Fein, has been a key figure in the Northern Ireland peace process. He has played a leading role in negotiations with the British government and has been instrumental in bringing about a cease-fire in the region.

Adams, however, has been a controversial figure. He has been accused of supporting terrorism and has been linked to a number of violent incidents in the past. Despite this, he has continued to be a key player in the peace process.

Adams has been a vocal supporter of the Good Friday Agreement, which ended the 30-year conflict in Northern Ireland. He has also been a strong advocate for the rights of Irish nationalists.

It is February 28, and Leap Year has arrived once again. Although many people think of Leap Year as an additional day, in February, there are scientific reasons why February gains the extra day.

One of those reasons is that February seems to be the shortest month of the year. February 28 is the end of the traditional 30-day month of February, which is 5 days short of the 365.25 days it takes the Earth to orbit the Sun. To account for this discrepancy, February 29, or Leap Day, is added to the calendar every four years.

The other reason is to ensure that the calendar and the moon’s phases align. The lunar month, which is the time it takes for one full moon to appear, is about 29.5 days long. By adding an extra day to February every four years, we keep the calendar in sync with the lunar cycle.

However, this system isn’t perfect. Over time, the actual length of a year changes slightly due to various factors, such as the Earth’s axial wobble and the gravitational influence of other celestial bodies. This means that the extra day added in February may not always align perfectly with the actual length of the year.

Despite these imperfections, Leap Year has remained a consistent part of the Gregorian calendar system for centuries. It is a testament to the human ability to observe natural phenomena and develop systems to accurately document and predict them.

Coach Brian Brewer takes his John Carroll team to Florida this weekend for the Brown Spring Invitational. The Blue Streaks will face off against 11 other teams over the weekend. Brewer hopes he comes back with more answers than spring training.

Brewer, in his first year as a head coach, is looking forward to the weekend, saying, "I'm looking forward to working with them a little more and seeing how the guys gel together over the weekend."

The Blue Streaks will face off against eight teams this weekend and look to see how things play out. Brewer said, "We're looking to see how the guys play together and I'm excited to see how our hitting will be this year."

Right now Brewer expects the team's hitting to be a bit weak, and Brewer will be working on that as the season progresses. Brewer said, "We're working on getting the guys to hit the ball harder."

The Blue Streaks will play three games this weekend, with the first game on Friday against Alaska-Anchorage. Brewer is excited to see how the team matches up against strong competition.

The Blue Streaks are looking forward to the weekend and hope to come back with more answers than spring training.

"Did you hear?" she asks me in the middle of class. "What do you think she's talking about?"

"I don't know," I reply.

"She called today," she says.

"Really?" I ask.

"Yeah," she says. "She said she's going to the hospital for a blood test."

"Oh," I say.

"You know, for her cancer," she says.

"Oh," I say again.

"I don't know why she's doing it," she says. "I mean, she's been healthy all year."

"Well," I say, "maybe she's just being proactive."
